First Round Controversy; New Zealand or Columbia Top of Tables

The 2014 COE World Cup tournament kicked off Monday night, and it was not short on intensity, excitement, or controversy. The final tables showed the "All Blacks" of New Zealand, led by Coach Wayne, of Wales, leading Mexican Coach Paulo's side Columbia. However, Columbia promptly filed a protest which is under investigation from FIFA on how points were tallied.

HOLLAND & ARGENTINA ATOP STANDINGS IN POOL B

The younger COE division found a tight race after what appeared to be early dominance by Holland. Argentina led by Coach Ryan marched to level the Dutch in a dramatic come-back win in the final match of the night, while USA and Germany both silently stayed within shouting distance of the leaders.

Drama Unfolds; Odds Makers

Brian from Holland may be on the transfer market Tuesday. Some FIFA officials believed that Coach Mo may have overspent the FIFA allowable limit on players. USA laid claims that a goal they scored should have been allowed, while Drew issued a complaint that a New Zealand goal was offside. FIFA had many decisions to contemplate after just the first round of competition. But ODDS makers were ready with a couple of odds to complement the first round: 8:1 Argentina wins the Cup; 2:1 most players think Coach Wayne is English; 2:1 Coach Griff leads tourney in turnovers

Holland was left scratching their heads after they saw a 3 game unbeaten streak come screeching to a halt when Coach Ryan's Argentina side put in 2 goals in a 30-second span. The Dutch Coach Mo seemed unworried.

Coach Paulo of Columbia has a history of "UN" fair play in the COE World Cup. FIFA investigating this photo to find out if this is Paulo helping a teammate, or hampering an opponent.
